

School funding is getting a lot of media coverage at the moment, especially with the release of the new educational reforms. A big area of focus is the removal of the decile ratings for schools. Decile rating came into effect as a means of targeting extra funding into our more disadvantaged areas as a way of creating equity of access to education. This in effect allows these schools to expect less from their communities while still being able to provide a rich and diverse curriculum. This was initially used as a tool by the Ministry and was not a publically shared and was simply a mechanism for funding. Sadly, a simple sounding but blunt tool has been undermined through the publishing of this information and families have interpreted the ratings as a measure of the quality education in schools. There is absolutely no link between decile ratings and school achievement but it simply a measure of income for a geographic area surrounding a school. With decile rating looking to be abolished, a new more targeted system is due to come into effect. This will look to target funding more to the individual circumstances of the students in the school and ensure that the resourcing is exactly where it is needed. This will require big data sharing within government departments, including Corrections, IRD, WINZ and Health where pre-cursors to underachievement will be tracked and the schools with students who identify with a range of risks factors will gain additional funding. On the surface, this is welcome news and is certainly an improvement on the very blunt decile rating tool. However, I have massive concerns with how this information will be made available publically. Schools will not be told who in the school attracts the additional funding but will be given an overall percentage (not a rating), of how many of their students present with these risk factors. This information will also become publically accessible, meaning that parents and our media will be able to draw conclusions not just on the income levels of families in a school but also on potentially the quality of the student and families attending that school. Sadly I see this as potentially labelling schools in a more adverse way than they have ever been before. The only group who will really look to gain from this review is the public bus companies who crisscross our cities to transport students to schools and with what will be perceived as more desirable students.

Congratulations to all the students who represented Hurunui College at the Hurunui Primary Schools Cross Country of Wednesday. From initial reports, the students did exceptionally well and came home with some very strong finishes.

A reminder to all parents and families that the school will be CLOSED on Tuesday 6th June for a teachers' only day. Buses will not be running and the students can enjoy an extended Queen's Birthday weekend. I hope everybody is able to take the opportunity to enjoy some time off over the long weekend and we will see the students back next Wednesday.

THE BATTLE OF MESSINES RIDGE, 7TH JUNE 1917

Tunnelling became commonplace because of the stalemate that was the Western Front of World War One. Miners had been hard at work, sometimes 30 metres below the ground, for nearly 18 months leading up to the battle. Large amounts of explosives were placed under the German front lines at 21 locations, and were detonated at 3am on the morning of the 7th June.

Nineteen were successful while no.20 detonated itself in 1955 killing one cow. The remaining mine lays where it was set but no one knows its exact location.

Ten thousand German troops are believed to have died as a result of the mines, still one of the largest man made explosions outside of Nuclear detonations.

The New Zealand division suffered nearly 5000 casualties, with 700 killed, including five men from the Hawarden / Wakari area. New Zealand gained the Victoria Cross at Messine, awarded to L/Cpl Samuel Frickleton of Blackball. He was one of five brothers who served in WW1.
